

LABOR SUB-FOREMAN

DISTINGUISHING FEATURES OF THE CLASS:

This is supervisory and manual work that is often routine and repetitive in nature. Specific work assignments or instructions are received from a higher level authority or foreman and work is frequently reviewed and inspected for completion and compliance with instructions. Supervision is exercised over relatively small groups of employees engaged in manual labor, and the employee may be expected to participate and make independent judgments and decisions when necessary. Employees in this class receive direct supervision from a foreman or other higher level supervisor and are responsible to that authority for compliance with expected actions.
